

Georgina Rivas-Martinez is a library student at Long Island University Post in New York. This is her first year studying at Palmer School, which is the Library School at LIU Post, and her concentration is Public Librarianship.

Georgina obtained a B.S. in Childhood Spanish Education from Molloy College this past May. She has also been working at the Freeport Memorial Library for eight years and just loves serving the Hispanic community. She is currently a Librarian Trainee in the Children's Room and Adult Reference. She's from a Hispanic household and is completely fluent in Spanish.

As a minority, Georgina is interested in reaching out to the Hispanic populations and focusing on becoming a bilingual outreach librarian. She also works at LIU's academic library and enjoys it a lot. Outside of the library she enjoys going to Barnes and Nobles, going to museums, and visiting different libraries. She enjoys reading literature in Spanish from great writers and poets like Garcilaso De La Vega.
